Presents: Treating the Female Patient for Wellness September 16 & 17, 2017 Fayetteville, AR

About The Instructor and Course

INSTRUCTOR: Kristina (Kris) Petrocco-Napuli, DC, MS is currently an Associate Professor at National University of Health Sciences-FI within the department of chiropractic clinical sciences. She graduated with her degree from New York Chiropractic College, following graduation she entered into a post doctoral fellowship program within chiropractic technique.

She has worked on interdisciplinary treatment teams related to patient centered care and has a strong clinical interest in women's health, chronic pain and integrative care. Dr. Petrocco-Napuli is frequently sought after as a national speaker and has a strong interest in clinical and educational research.

THIS COURSE: It is widely known that females tend to seek chiropractic care more frequently than males. There are many complaints that are unique to females which correlate to the life phase. In this course Dr. Petrocco-Napuli will discuss the pathophysiology associated with pain and the impact on the female population. Recognize the most common conditions which present in chiropractic practices and discuss assessment and treatment options. Correlate clinical judgment and presenting conditions to assist in developing quality patient care treatment plans. Demonstrate various assessment and treatment options, including orthotics, for conditions associated with the female patient. Discuss patient centered and integrative models of care surrounding female patients.
